In India, the Controller General of Patent, Designs and Trademarks is the governing body responsible for managing intellectual property rights. As a signatory to the Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights agreement, India is obligated to adhere to international standards for IPR protection. The country has aligned its statutes, enforcement provisions, and dispute resolution procedures with international standards to ensure the effective protection of intellectual rights.

While there is no specific statute exclusively dedicated to trade secrets and know-how, Indian courts recognize their importance and protection under common law. Violations of confidentiality, misappropriation of trade secrets, and unauthorized disclosure of know-how can be addressed through common law principles and legal remedies.
