- Time management is the process of organizing and planning how to divide your time between different activities. Good time management takes a shift in focus from activities to results. Being busy isn't the same as being effective. In fact, for many people, the busier they are, the less they actually achieve.
- Good organization can also lead to better thinking. Decision making and problem solving rely on a clear head, plus ready access to the right information and tools.
- Organizational Skills
 - Listening skills
 - Communication
 - Creative thinking
 - Design
 - Documentation
 - Identifying problems
 - Conflict resolution
 - Multitasking
 - Developmental planning
 - Public speaking

Venue : Seminar Hall
Programme Outcome : PO9,PO10
Total Number of student's benefitted : 323

- Adaptability skills are proficiencies you can use to adjust to new situations and change your actions as needed. This involves privileging strategic thinking and being open-minded when encountering obstacles. Unexpected changes, and worst-case scenarios happen in any work environment. That's why adaptability skills are important. They aid your decision-making and help you decide how to set goals. If you're adaptable, you can continue moving forward instead of dwelling on the issues you face.
- Adaptable individuals need to be empathetic to how all kinds of people respond to changing circumstances and know how to listen and respond to tensions they might face. Practice listening with an open mind and asking them how they'd like to see problems solved without forcing solutions.
